“HUMAN FLY” CLIMBS TO COLORADO BUILDING TOP

Takes Twenty Minutes for Perilous Trip of Nine Stories, While Crowd Watches.

Edward M. Allen, sometimes called the “human fly,” climbed the Colorado building yesterday afternoon. With no other aid than his own hands and feet, Allen clung to the trimmings as he went up story by story, stopping at each floor to chat with those who came to the windows.

The twenty-minute climb up the nine-story building was watched by a crowd from the street. After Allen had got up five or six stories the crowd saw that he could accomplish the feat and started to wonder how he would get around the large coping onto the roof. This was soon seen when a knot of rope was let over the roof, by the aid of which the “human fly” climbed over the coping.

Allen scaled the thirty-third floor of the Flatiron building in New York and has climbed all the tall buildings and church spires authorities will allow him to attempt. Yesterday Allen placed his cup on the ground before he started to climb and informed the crowd that it was there for a purpose. Allen came down in the elevator, sought his cap and found exactly 1 cent in it.

“I think that climb was worth more than that,” he said.

Plowing.

I watch the farmer plow; he's busy at it now; he deftly tools his span of mules, and whacks them with a hough. One minute he says, “Gee!” Next minute, “Haw!” says he; the mules, they haw, and strain and draw upon the double-tree. The plow point strikes a stone; the farmer heaves a groan; and then his nubs surveys his ribs, to find the broken bone. Then, finding he is whole, he takes a ten-foot pole, and prods the mules, and says, “You fools, such tricks I will not thole!” The plowshare does not scour, and he, for half an hour, suspends the rules and lams the mules with wondrous vim and power. To turn the furrow over—it is the oldest chore; man's tilled the earth since Adam's birth, and will forevermore. And ever, as he walks, he picks up clods and rocks, in west and east, to pelt his beast, his horse or mule or ox. WALT MASON.

LOOK FOR BIG DISPLAY AT COMING HORSE SHOW

Chamber of Commerce and Retail Merchants' Association Aiding the Management.

With both the Chamber of Commerce and Retail Merchants' Association aiding the plans for Washington's annual spring horse show, officials of the show today predicted that it will eclipse all previous exhibitions of the kind and having the biggest open-air horse meet of any city in the country.

The Chamber of Commerce has offered a silver loving cup as one of the prizes, and the Retail Merchants' Association has officially designated the period May 6 to 11 as “horse show week.” Commercial establishments and advertising concerns have been asked to refer to the show in their advertisements.

Washington's Location Favorable.

On account of Washington's location between two great horse-breeding sections, officials of the show are convinced they have a big opportunity to bring together the leading breeders and exhibitors and stimulate interest in the horse industry, to the end that better mounts may be furnished the United States Army. In this work they are aided by patriotic motives which have impressed the members of the capital's leading commercial organizations, and all indications point to the show being developed into one of Washington's greatest annual events.

Manager Hazen's Comment.

“We expect the show to be a direct factor in providing better army mounts,” said Manager M. C. Hazen today. “It has a national mission to perform and already the desired results are beginning to be seen. The show next month should accomplish more along this line than any previous meet and there is little doubt but that the entries in number and quality will set a new high mark.”
